

Anti-Slavery Office,
New York, 22 July, 1859.

Dear Garrison,

81 Can you send me, immediately, your account of the visit you received from Aaron Burr?
It was published in the Liberator, I think, some time between Jan. & April, 1857; but you will probably recollect better than I do. I want to look at it, to see if I ought not to speak of it, in a sentence, somewhere in the sketch for the Cyclopædia.

I have for next week's Standard a long letter from Wendell

Phillips about <sup>the</sup> Pillsbury-Foster controversy. As a statement of our relation to the Republican party, Cheever, Becher, etc., and of the ~~new~~ grounds upon which they are open to criticism, I find no fault with it*, but ~~kind~~ as an effort to state the position of Pillsbury and his friends and shield them from deserved censure, I don't quite like it. He evidently hopes to open the way <sup>for</sup> ~~from~~ them to resume coöperation, but I doubt if he succeeds, though I hope he may.

Yours, cordially,

Oliver Johnson

*It is exactly the ground ever taken by the Liberator & Standard.
